

6516208559.txt

I am an auditor who travels throughout the US. My life has become more enjoyable since the advent of XM Satellite Radio. The traffic and weather reports have been a great addition and a very useful tool since I travel in many of these large cities and am not familiar with their traffic problems. I am paying for this service so what right does the NAB have to restrict my access. This is a free market society and if the radio broadcasters can't compete then they should improve their services or change their programming. I rarely listened to the (regular) radio when I travel because of the limited range of the signals, this would cause someone to constantly play with the radio trying to find a station that may have local traffic and weather. Please do not further restrict the freedom of the American people.